The Zumwacker Catalogue

The Tackiest of Gifts
Christmas, 1994

All items have been selected from real catalogs. Frightening, isn't it!

Here's a jello mold that will make your holiday parties festive! Mmmm good. Roast turkey, sweet buttered yams, fresh cranberries, hot apple pie and nice glistening brain jello!

Bar Mitzvah Troll Dolls: What a clever notion! Now you can commemorate that special moment in every Jewish child's life (bat for girls) by placing this cunning little piece of shit on your mantle. This gift item pushes the envelope of human creativity

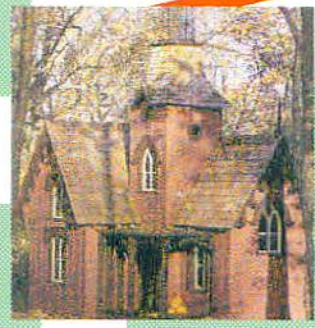
Belgian Potatoes: You can imagine the surprise when we opened our beautifully wrapped present and found these spuds. It's the next best thing to a Mr. Potato Head!

WINNER!!

PooPets wins our Golden Schlock Award. Made out of the real thing...these molded little pieces of poop are used to fertilize your indoor plants. Just place a little rabbit or frog in your planter and—Voila—(well we don't know what happens.) "For the people who give a..."

It's a pickle ornament to hang on your tree. That's right, a pickle ornament in that glorious pickle green color. Makes you just want to cough up a gherkin, doesn't it?

Aunt Bertha reached the 420 pound level and marked the occasion by buying a couple of these handy deserts. Now she doesn't have to wash a dish or a fork—she can just sink those molars right into a tasty Cheesecake On A Stick. And after you lick the last morsel of granulated sweet cheese from the stick you can collect them and the nifty motivational diet quotes printed on them.



This play house from Hammacher Schlemmer costs $12,000. Laugh if you want to but you can rent it out to midgets and make a nice return on your investment.
